IDF troops last night set up roadblocks and launched wide-scale searches in Judea, Samaria, and the Jordan Valley for a terrorist murderer who escaped from Palestinian custody. Abdel Qaisi, 20, escaped from a Jencho hospital, where he had been taken from prison three days ago for treatment of an ailment which Palestinian officials did not disclose. They said he fled through a window. The Palestinian Authority relayed the information to the IDF, which immediately took action to capture him if he ventured into Israeli-held territory, the IDF Spokesman said. A Palestinian security court had convicted Qaisi, along with another terrorist and the driver of their getaway car, of killing Etta Tzur and her 12-year-old son, Ephraim, near Beit El in December. Oaisi and the second gunman were sentenced to life imprisonment at hard labor. The third man was jailed for 15 years. Security sources said Palestinian forces were looking for Qaisi in Jencho.

Bereaved husband and father Yoel Tzur said last night that Qaisi's escape was not unexpected: "We're not surprised at the escape of the murderer of my wife and son. All of the steps taken by the Palestinian Authority against the murderer were staged, and so was his escape.

The autonomous region has served as a staging area for the murder squads, and now it serves as a refuge for the murderer of Etta and Ephraim, of blessed memory, as well as [the killer of] yeshiva student David Boim, who escaped from Nablus Prison."

Exchange-rate rift highlights Meridor, Frenkel battle

By AMOTZ ASA-EL

Minister Binyamin Prime Netanyahu, Finance Minister Dan Meridor, and Bank of Israel Govemor Jacob Frenkel yesterday failed to reach agreement on the central bank's request to expand the "bands" (range) within which the shekel is traded.

The three did, however, agree to impose a NIS 600 million budget cut and launch a sweeping foreign currency reform "within one year." Politically, the dispute is widely seen in light of the strained relations between Meridor and his two interlocutors. Economically, the controversy over the trading bands stems from the Bank of Israel's accelerated dollar purchases over the past few months, a process which has led the bank to accumulate a record-foreign currency reserves. Expanded bands would allow the bank to cease purchasing dollars, without sharply reducing interest rates. Meridor, on the other hand, would like to compel the governor to abandon his tight-money policy, in line with the demands of industrialists who want a weaker shekel. While this dispute pertains to the shekel's status in the short term, Netanyahu did announce that agreement was reached to lift nearly all foreign currency restrictions within one year. This would mean high of more than $16 billion in that Israelis will ultimately be allowed to possess unlimited amounts of foreign currency, open bank accounts abroad, and freely trade in financial assets anywhere in the world.

Meanwhile, the agreement among the three to slash the budget by an additional NIS 600m. may also result in renewed discord within the coalition, considering the cuts must come jointly from the defense, education, labor and social affairs, and health budgets, each of which is presided over by parties and individuals who are widely expected to resist that decision.

The need to further cut a budget that was already trimmed by NIS 7.2b, when it was passed stems from the Treasury's wish to rebalance the budget, in order to achieve its selfimposed goal of a deficit which is 2.8% of gross domestic product.

The riots began in mid-morning and by late aftemoon were quelled. "Every day the riots start at the same time, when pupils have a school break," said one soldier. According to Hebron Jewish community spokesman Noam Arnon, 25 firebombs were hurled at troops. However, the IDF Spokesman could not confirm the number, stating only that firebombs had been thrown at troops and border policemen, who dispersed the rioters with tear gas and rubber bullets.

Amon said the Jewish community demands the Palestinian Police take a firmer band against the rioters. "Nothing happens to them. There is no deterrence, so they continue to attack our soldiers," he said.

As in previous days, there were no Palestinian policemen on hand to stop the rioters from throwing bottles, cans, fire-bombs, and large rocks at the troops.

A Palestinian boy is rushed to the hospital yesterday after being hit in the head by a rubber bullet fired by a soldier in Hebron. The boy, 12, who was first rumored to have been killed, was later reported to be in serious condition.

A few hundred meters from Beit Hadassah, 10:30 a.m. Palestinian shopkeepers on Shallala Street close their stores and stand on the sidewalk, looking toward groups of IDF soldiers buddling behind metal shutters, dodging the rocks and firebomhs being hurled at them. A youth waving a tattered Israeli flag jeers at the troops, and proceeds to hum it. A shot rings out; the youth falls and others rush to his aid and scoop him up. If the diagonal band is widened, what will happen to the shekel exchange rate? I wouldn't know specifically, bul I don't think we will see any depreciation.

By JENNIFER FRIEDLIN

NEWSLINE

With Ezra Sadan, former director-general of the Treasury.

Why do some people oppose widening the band?

The Ministry of Finance insists that [Bank of Israel Governor Jacob] Frenkel lower interest rates in exchange for a widening of the band. But the Ministry of Finance should balance its budget and resort to the instruments it has at its disposal, rather than just saying no to Frenkel's proposals. In the last five years, the Ministry of Finance did not develop a single instrument through which to deal with the effects of a widened band.

In the long run, there is no escaping widening the band, but that means the government will gradually lose control over the shekel's exchange rate.

On the one hand, people say they are for dereg-ulation, but when it comes to actually implementing it, they are shocked by the fact that the govemment will lose control.

What are the benefits of such a move? I think that in the long run, Frenkel is right; if we want to maintain our position as a Western economy, we have to take these steps. A widened band will allow the shekel to find its natural mar-

HEBREW PRESS REVIEW

MICHAL YUDELMAN

Will a more freely floating shekel result in capital flight?

There is no doubt in my mind that widening the band is an exercise designed to trim excess foreign currency reserves.

ket position without Bank of Israel interventions.

Israel has accumulated $16 billion as a result of the Bank of Israel's market interventions. This money sits relatively idly and is not helping induce economic growth.

The Ministry of Finance also wants to reduce the foreign currency reserves, but it suggests achieving this by reducing interest rates.

Are exporters' fears that with widened trading bands the shekel will appreciate well founded?

We have to remind the industrialists that 25 years ago union leaders and farmers opposed the signing of various free-trade agreements, and then they adjusted to them.

In the short run, these groups may ask for a smooth change rather than jump into cold water, but this is not always possible. If people find they are in the wrong business, they will have to adjust. The Ministry of Finance says that if interest rates are high, industrialists are not keen on investing and spending.

But if interest rates are lowered and inflation rises to 10% or 15%, the industrialists will say, "What do we care."

BACKGROUND The diagonal mechanism

By AMOTZ ASA-EL

NEWS

In order to keep the shekel exposed to some market forces. but at the same time prevent it from fluctuating too sharply, the Bank of Israel created the socalled diagonal mechanism.

By measuring the difference between Israel's expected annual inflation and the leading foreign economies' actual inflation, the bank created a diagonal line which spans the entire fiscal year, and imposed 7 percent bands above and under it. That is the realm within which the central bank allows the shekel's exchange rate to fluctuate. towards its basket of five leading world currencies.

In other words, at a given moment the shekel's optimal exchange rate, from the bank's viewpoint, should be the point on the diagonal which represents that moment, and its actual rate would be above or under it, according to the markets' whims.

If the markets try to push the sbekel to the upper band's limit, which from the bank's viewpoint would imply an excessively weak currency, the bank would intervene in trading, by buying shekels, and thereby artificially raising their price.

rate front. Meridor's aim, however, was to > shekel less attractive to traders and thereby causing it to depreciate on the markets. In this, the finance minister represents the interests of exponers, who are injured in the short term by a strong currency since their revenues are in foreign currencies, while their expenses, particularly wages, are in shekels.

In the event that the shekel actually becomes fully convenible, as Netanyahu yesterday promised to make the Israeli currency "within one year," the diagonal mechanism would be obsolete since the exchange rate would be determined by the markets alone.

Amnesty Int'l issues 1996 report

Says that 'torture of Palestinians in Israeli jails continues to be systematic'

By Jerusalem Post Staff

Amnesty International yesterday published its yearly report on human rights abuses in 1996. The 378-page report details violations by more than 200 governments. Today, the report will be presented to Attomey-General Elyakim Rubinstein.

Al is a worldwide voluntary movement, claiming some 1,000,000 members and patrons. its stated goals are to "free all prisoners of conscience and ensure fair and prompt trials for political prisoners."

Following are summaries of the report's findings in Israel, Jordan, Egypt, Syria, and the Palestinian Authority-controlled areas.

Israel At least 1,600 Palestinians were arrested. (1,000 after suicide bombings). Six hundred more and five Jewish Israelis were made administrative detainees, of whom 250 remained by year's end.

Three conscientious objectors and 65 Lebanese were jailed or transferred from Lebanon. Trials of 1,000 Palestinians did not meet international standards. They were charged with membership in illegal organizations and stonethrowing, and were often convict-ed on the basis of confessions extracted by force.

Torture of Palestinians "continued to be systematic," sanctioned by secret guidelines permitting "moderate" physical and psychological pressure. "Increased phys-ical pressure" was sanctioned after bombings.

At least 80 Palestinians died mostly in confrontation with the IDF, some "suggesting extrajudi-cial executions," notably master bomber Yihya Ayyash in January. The dead included 65 in the exchange of fire at checkpoints in September. Helicopter gunships sometimes reportedly shot at crowds. Seven houses were ture. demolished as punishment. Palestinians killed 56 Israelis.

General Security Service viola-tions went unpunished. A disciplinary court convicted the interrogator of one man, Abel Samad Harizat, who died from shaking, of "not carrying out his duty" and he returned to work.

Security forces "continued to enjoy virtual impunity for past human rights violations." In attacked."

AI called for the release or fair trial of administrative detainees and stressed that "sustained peace and security could only be built on the basis of respect for human rights."

The Palestinian Authority At least 1,200 people were arrested on security grounds, including 900 after suicide bombings. Most were released without charges within the year. At least 20 received "grossly" unfair trials in state security courts. Torture was widespread. Four died in jail and 10 were killed by PA security forces, sometimes suggesting extrajudicial executions. Eleven were sentenced to death but no judicial execution was carried

The new Legislative Council passed a first reading of a basic law declaring PA respect for UN human rights standards, but even when the PA High Court in Ramallah ordered the release of 10 Bir Zeit University students, the ruling was ignored and the court president was forced to retire.

Three human rights workers, Bassem Eid, Mohammed Dahman, and Iyyad Sarraj, were jailed for a day, two weeks and two weeks respectively. Sarraj ran an official PA-licensed human rights monitoring group. All were accused of spreading false information about PA abuses. Torture was widespread, including cigarette burnings, beatings, molten plastic, burning by electrical appliance, suspensions from the ceiling, and sleep deprivation. Three died from torture in jail.

The subsequent trial of three of the alleged torturers was itself unfair. Amnesty met with PA Chairman Yasser Arafat and talked about the impunity with which police abused human rights. Arafat said he was committed to ending tor-

Syria Scores of people were arrested on political grounds, adding to hundreds arrested from previous years. At least seven were banged in a Damascus square in March. Many have disappeared. Thirteen Kurds were arrested in February 1996 for celebrating their New Year in Aleppo and were still in details of torture in Syrian jails.

Lebanon Scores arrested, several political prisoners sentenced. There was one apparent extrajudicial execution and 10 were sentenced to death. The fate of thousands of Palestinians, Lebanese, Syrians, and others abducted since 1975 remains unknown. In September the Lebanese government issued a law regulating audio-visual media, limiting licenses to six TV and 12 radio stations. Scores, mainly from Christian opposition groups, were arrested after a December attack on a Syrian minibus in which the driver was killed. Some alleged torture.

A Nasserite group, the Lebanese Popular Congress, saw 25 arrests. Members of the pro-Iraqi wing of the Baath Party were transferred to Syria. Christian militia leader Samir Geagea, was acquitted of bombing a church but sentenced to 10 years for maintaining an illegal militia. Others were sentenced to death in absentia.

Jordan

Five prisoners of conscience remained in jail. Hundreds were arrested after anti-government bread riots in August, and some alleged torture. More than 100 political detainees were tried, some unfairly in state security courts. Jabal Dawleh died in custody after alleged torture or illtreatment. There were nine executions from 21 sentenced to death.

Six Hamas supporters arrested in March-April alleged they were tortured. Medical certificates of four showed injuries consistent with the allegations. No action was taken by authorities against the torturers. Ata Rushta, spokesperson of the Tahrir Party (radical Islamic) was sentenced to three years for a newspaper interview, though he did not advocate violence.

Five journalists were held for for up to 10 days incommunicado, for lese-majeste, or inciting sectarian or ethic disorder.

Egypt Seven prisoners of conscience were sentenced to three years imprisonment and 53 others, tried in 1995, sat in jail. Thousands of suspected supporters of banned Islamic groups were held without CAIRO (AP) - The court trying Azzam Azzam, the Israeli citizen who is accused of spying for Israel, yesterday refused a request from Azzam's lawyer to test invisible ink that prosecutors say was used to write secret messages. ### Lieberman seeks to soothe Greens heads had been questioned.

By LIAT COLLINS

Avigdor Lieberman, director-general of the Prime Minister's Office, yesterday explained to members of the Knesset's green caucus the idea behind a planned national enterprises law. The proposal aims to cut the bureaucracy in major projects by avoiding the National Planning and Construction Law. Last month, reports of his plan raised an angry response from environmentalists and the directors-general of other ministries.

The meeting was the initiative of MK Avraham Herschson, wbo heads the green caucus.

Lieberman stressed that the idea is still in the formative stage and he had not yet decided whether to carry out the project by legislation or by other means.

"I am also concerned with environmental issues," he said. Although the list of projects that would fall in the category of a national enterprise has yet to be completed, Lieberman gave some examples. They included: constructing an underground rail system in the Tel Aviv area: closing the Hirya landfill near Ben-Gunion Airport; moving Sde Doy Airport from Tel Aviv to an off-shore artificial island; moving the gas depot at Pi Glilot junction; and the Ben-Gurion 2000 plan.

"Some of these cannot wait any longer. There is also a safety factor involved," Lieberman said.

He noted the danger to flights from the birds swarming above the Hirya dump and the risk from the gas depot close to a heavily populated area.

Lieberman said he intends to seck a way to get rid of "bureaucratic" bottlenecks" and noted that some of these projects have been under discussion since the 1970s. An independent authority would be established to oversee the national enterprises, he said.

MKs Avraham Poraz (Shinni) and Eitan Cabel (Labor) both said the bottleneck is at the decision-making level.

AMSTERDAM - The European Union considered adopting a new treaty yesterday that would bar it from assuming a military role - in effect, recognizing the primacy of NATO in European security.

France and Germany have pushed for a new EU treaty to include responsibility for defense - a position strongly opposed by the United States, the largest power in the NATO military alliance.

Crisis government

Then the day rolls around for Israeli volers to decide whether to reelect Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, it is assumed they will base their decision on the great issues of the day: the peace process, the economy, and social relations. That may be the case: but they could well decide they are just tired of Netanyahu's style of governing - decision by crisis.

The decision announced Monday night at the Caesarea economic conference to lift most foreign currency restrictions over the next year was a welcome one, upon which all can agree. But then Netanyahu, Finance Minister Dan Meridor, and Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel sequestered themselves in an all-night, but futile effort to reach agreement on the "diagonal mechanism," the components of exchange rate reform, and budget policy.

The diagonal mechanism is the band within which the shekel is allowed to fluctuate against a basket of curtencies. The sbekel just broke through the lower border of the band, forcing the Bank of Israel to buy dollars yesterday, as it has intermittently over the past few months, to keep the sbekel within the government-imposed limits. The current crisis arose when Frenkel proposed widening the band rather than maintaining the shekel within its current limits, a move which Meridor would reportedly resign over rather than accept.

The irony of the situation is that there rarely has been a threesome in charge of Israel's economic policy in closer agreement on basic policy direction as Netanyahu, Meridor, and Frenkel. It is considered natural that Frenkel and Meridor would battle over interest rates, as central bank chiefs and finance ministers do in the US and elsewhere. And as for premiers and their finance ministers, Yitzhak Rabin also bad his own bitter fight with Avraham Shohat over the capital gains tax.

What is unnatural is for policies in areas of general agreement, such as currency liberalization, to become the subject of resignation rumors, all-night debating sessions, and political backbiting.

The standing media enthusiasm for a juicy coalition crisis is not sufficient to explain this pbenomenon. The frenzied speculation over whether Meridor would resign or be fired was not built upon thin air, but most likely upon targeted leaks. The leaks, in turn, are built upon the sour relationship between Netanyahu and Meridor, and the fact that Netanyahu initially tried to shut Meridor out of his cabinet entirely. It is one year after the messy business of Netanyahu's forming his cabinet, in which National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon and Meridor were initially left out in the cold. It might have been expected that, after this initial muscle-flexing, Netanyahu would realize he bas in fact been elected prime minister, and it is time to worry about governing rather than settling scores. What is bizarre is that the directly elected Netanyahu, already the most powerful prime minister in Israel's bistory on paper, cannot stop struggling for even more power.

At the time of this writing, Meridor and Netanyahu were moving toward a showdown in a snap, evening cabinet meeting, which itself was only called after the protests of many ministers against taking major economic decisions in the dead of night without their input, Netanyahu is reportedly pusbing a proposal that is farther from what Meridor can accept, even though Frenkel and Meridor bad already reached a possible compromise.

Whether Meridor is forced out of the government or a last-minute compromise is reached, it is evident that a legitimate policy debate, far from being defused by the prime minister, was actively transformed into a vehicle for a power struggle against one of his own ministers.

This is no way to run a railroad. Even more astonishing is that this whole scene is taking place under the shadow of a coalition crisis with Industry and Trade Minister Natan Sbaransky's party, Yisrael Ba'aliya. Among Sbaransky's demands is that the recommendations of the committee chaired by him and Meridor to develop lessons learned from the Bar-On Affair be implemented. So at the same time Netanyahu is resisting Sharansky's recommendations on common sense, good-government, and decision-making procedures, he is giving a vivid demonstration, once again, of bow his own decision-making process is the very antithesis of Sharansky's vision.

There are two rays of bope in this mess. The first is that, in his speech to the Caesarea conference, Netanyahu finally unveiled an excellent proposal: the appointment of an independent commission to find ways to "make the central government smaller, faster, and more efficient" and to reduce the government's burden on the economy. The commission will be beaded by arespected professional, Yoram Turbovitch, and will include representatives from government, academia, and the private sector. It is a mystery why this proposal was not put forward on day one, rather than year two, of the government's tenure - but better late than never.

The second hope is that Sbaransky and the rest of the ministers who are tired and embarrassed the government's Keystone Cops-style of by decision making will force Netanyahu to accept the procedural recommendations of the Sbaransky-Meridor committee. Though it was buried in the muck of his political mud-wrestling tactics, Netanyahu deserves credit for taking positions in the economy's long-term interest and not pandering to shortsighted industrialist griping. Now if only Netanyahu could learn, or be trained, to work with his own cabinet instead of against it, some of his better instincts might come to the fore.

He explained that the IDF's working assumption has been that it can hold these isolated strategic points without controlling the access to them. That's right. The strategic map assumes that secure IDF access isn't needed to some strategic points. But the PA's continuing security violations and virulent declarations raise serious doubts about the validity of this assumption.

The IDF assumes the need for a 4 km-wide swath in order to secure strategic passages from the Green Line into the Jordan Valley. Run similar security passages to those isolated strategic points on the map, and the Palestinians are left with considerably less territory under their cootrol.

And that's just the start. Increasing Palestinian violations are bound to convince all but the terminally optimistic that even tighter security arrangements are necessary. So while Arafat sends his men to push the lines back, his actions may be fast persuading Israel that the state's security requires even more space.

The biggest mistake the socalled peace camp can make today is to claim that Netanyahu's Allon-Plus will kill the peace process. Security may not be a sufficient condition for a deal, but it is a necessary one.

While walking in my Jerusalem neight Jerusalem neigbbor-bood this week, I've nin into some of the women who parucipated in the egalitarian minyan at the Western Wall on Shavuot moming.

They are still shakeo up by the violent expression of baseless hatred by Jews for fellow Jews. the kind of hatred that caused the Second Temple to be destroyed.

Listening to their experience reminded me of my own several years back, when for a few consecutive months 1 joined the Women of the Wall on Rosh Hodesh.

That was my first encounter with tear gas and flying chairs aimed my way. I was perified by the hatred haredi men and women showed us.

After the tear gas, I decided I didn't need the Kotel in my life. anymore. After all, what was it? Just another wall, a collection of 2,000-year-old stones.

When I really wanted to pray I would go to my local Reform synagogue, a place open to all kinds of people, including the, mentally infirm from the Akim neigbborhood shelter.

When I pray in my synagogue, I know God is listening, even smiling. At the Wall, He obviously sleeps.

So I was caught unawares by my feelings of outrage at this latest outburst of religious violence. I forgot how I had aban-doned the Wall to the haredim years ago.

How do they get away with this bnoliganism? I asked myself. Doesn't the Wall belong to all the Jewish people? Don't we all have the right to pray there - if not next to the Herodian stones because of the "custom of the place," then at least at the back of the plaza, where the egalitarian minyan coogregated last week?

Sir, - 1 am a proud Jew; proud of the diversity of my people, my culture and my religion. I consider all Jews my brothers and sisters. I don't first ask how observant they are. But today, we are all under attack. There are haredi Israeli and American Jews amongst us who have decided that Reform and Conservative Judaism are separate religions. They are building new walls to separate the observant Jews from those of us who are not "Jewish enough."

Reform, Reconstructionist and Conservative Judaism have proud histories. However, as the mainstream of the Diaspora, they have stepped aside and allowed the Orthodox minority to grab the reins of Judaism and direct its future. It is time to wake up and say enough. In my eyes, the magnificence of Judaism is reflected in its diversity. In recorded history, we are a unique people. Never before have so few accomplished so much.

I am looking to my Federation presidents, my rabbis and other community leaders to stand up and help me voice my anger. I want my community leaders to organize a Mission to Israel to speak face to face first with the prime minister and then to protest en masse outside the Knesset. When the conversion bill comes up for debate, they should move inside to protest louder and louder. HARRIETT BERKELHAMMER

MISSIONARY ACTIVITY BILL

Sir, - 1 was quite surprised to read in Hillel Kuttler's May 28 article ("US Christians protest Knesset bill limiting missionary activity") the erroneous statement that "The campaign began when Galtronics of Athens, Georgia ... wrote to Georgia senators," thus accusing Galtronics of being responsible for instigating a campaign by American Christian fundamentalists to protest the proposed bill sponsored by Nissim Zvilli and Moshe Gafni. The campaign has ariseo from alarmed Israeli citizens who are certain that the bill will do incalculable social and political damage to Israel's reputation as a modem pluralistic democracy. I am an Israeli who worked at Galtronics in Tiberias for two years, and my husband has been working there for well over a decade. I must say that while some employees of Galtronics consider the bill to be a shocking violation of basic human rights, it is absolutely false that the protest campaign was begun by Galtronics. It is obvious that reporters are making Galtronics a lightning rod of their accusations simply because it is known to be a company owned by evangelical

Christians ROBERTA KELLUM Poriya.

COMMENDABLE WORK

Sir, - In recent weeks, the focus of publicity has been on the Swiss-Nazi gold affair and the efforts of the World Jewish Congress and others to resolve the shocking scandal. However, there is another significant area which I believe should receive equal attention.

I would like to commend the work of the World Jewish Restitution Organization for pursuing the claims for Jewish communal and private property confiscated by the Germans and later taken over by many of the current East and Central European govemments.

WJRO Vice-Chairman Naftali Lavie should be coogratulated for his determination and persistence in getting these Jewish assets returned to their rightful owners.

Lithuania, Latvia, the Czech Republic, Belarus, Moldova and especially Poland have ignored or stalled on these claims for the past 50 years. Currently, many of them are seeking membership in NATO and the EU. Such membership should be conditioned on their fulfilling their humanitarian obligations as civilized nations.

Physiotherapy for Labor

Tuch has been written and said about the Labor leadership primary. The focus, naturally, was on the candidates themselves - their personalives, babits and campaigns. The election process itself, as a political, democratic process, received scant attention.

The leadership contest was USstyle, although Labor's strict limitations prevented an all-out street campaign. (The party's constitution allows no billboards, radio or TV commercials).

The six-month process highlighted four attractive potential leaders, each symbolizing something of the national ethos that Labor carries as a movement ---security, aliya, higher education, the peace process. The fact that all four candidates slood out from the Labor rank-and-file may be credited to the process itself.

The introduction of the primaries system (this writer, together with MKs Efraim Sneh and Ori Orr, was privileged to be one of its initialors in early 1989) was a revolution in local politics. It went hand-in-hand with the trend internationally of decentralizing major parties and placing more rights and responsibilities on the members themselves.

Knesset legislation and internal party rules notwithstanding, the system is still flawed. But Labor, unlike the Likud, has tried to tackle the flaws by introducing strict scrutlny and limitations oo major expenditures such as advertising. Decentralizing the parties may entail risks in a divided society such as ours. But the decentralization and weakening of our two major parties has come about mostly as a result of the direct election law and the amendments to the party financing laws.

The leadership primary also showed up the advantages of the process for the big parties.

First, it showed the beauty of involving the members en masse in electing their candidate for national leader. Secondly, it gave newcomers a fair chance of climbing to the top without depending

The fact that Beo-Ami's campaign was so successful despite its financial limitations was primarily because of the great public interest in the process. This, of course, led to great media attention, which all the candidates tried to exploit. This in turn influenced the members themselves, activating many of them.

ONE THING analysts like to stress is how both Binyamin Netanyahu and Ehud Barak used the primaries system to take over their respective selves as neither religious nor secular, who straddle a life style somewhere in between, I had made myself an accomplice to the Shavuot outrage.

> THE baredim are staking ont a place that belongs to all the Jewish people; by absenting ourselves out of fear of violence, people like me are allowing them to do so.

The Wall was liberated for the entire Jewish people, and the entire Jewish people must fight to make sure it remains available for our use.

Jews who subscribe to plural- ... ism, who acknowledge the many voices and faces of contemporary Judaism, thus have two options: We can either treat the Wall as a bastion of baredi Judaism, as a monument to haredi intransigence, or we can say: We won't stand for this.

The first option entails a personal sacrifice of whole chapters of our religions history, it entails our forfeiting the possibility of ... finding meaning at the site of our historic spiritual center.

And if I am ready to forfeit the Kotel, it is but a short mental leap to saying, "Let them have Jerusalem as well."

Am I willing to abandon the city to haredi hooligans? No.

So if I and others like me feel unreservedly that the Kotel belongs to all the Jewish people, it means that the Reform and Cooservative movements here and abroad, and civil rights and women's groups in Israel must rally to a clarico call for thousands of Jews to gather at the Wall on Tisba B'Av for an egalitarian reading of Lamentations.

We must call for the police to. turn out in large numbers to protect Jews of all streams, to arrest any who shove, spit or throw things, rather than merely removing the victims of the violence.

If they do not, no enlightened person will want to live m Jerusalem. It will become a city with a past, but no future.

If the Jewish world and the Israeli establishment do not stand up to hooliganism, the words of Lamentations might become painfully prophetic for those Jews in search of a middle path: "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people ... all her beanty is departed."

THE plot thickens and interest quickens as Erwin Eisenberg and his mother Leah battle it out in the courts over the estate of deceased tycoon Shoul Eisenberg, whose death has opened a family can of worms. Erwin Eisenberg is now accusing bis mother and sisters of having pried open his father's safes, taking money, valuables and possibly the original will in which the senior Eisenberg left 80 percent of his estate to his son. Meanwhile Mama and the girls want the courts to appoint an executor, which would make Erwin Eisenberg very unhappy. Such a move, he believes, would be disastrous for business. But the whole affair has the makings of a first-class soap opera. Erwin Eisenberg would do well to take out the first option.

reveral years ago, my family and I spent the intermediate Udays of Pessah on an organized vacation at a Society for the Preservation of Nature field school . During meals in the dining room. I would see a family of cight eating at a corner table. The children were quiet and wellbehaved and the mother looked young, slim, beautiful and calm.

"What's your secret?" I asked her. "I actually do have one," she said. "I've been taking Adler parenting courses for eight years. Without them, I wouldn't survive." According to the Adler Institute in Tel Aviv, there are approximately 600 trained Adlerian group leaders around the country. This past fall, my husband and I decided to take such a 24-week course. The highlights of it will be summarized in this and the next two columns.

When our course ended, one mother, who had been unable to wean her one-year-old or send him to day care, managed to do both. The two- and four-year-old sons of one mother who wouldn't clean their room or dress themselves when the course began, now do both.

One divorced, anxious mother, whose seven-year-old always whined and complained when she returned home from visiting her father, managed to distance herself from what went on when her daughter was with her ex-husband. The mother's well-being and the child's behavior improved dramatically. The parenting courses are based on the work of the psychologist Alfred Adler, a physician who was a student of Freud's and later broke off from him to found his own school of psychology. The central ideas underlying the approach are that every child wants to belong to his family. In order to feel good, a child must feel that he has a place in his family. The Adlerians believe that when a child is not sure of bis place - and this can be a com-

A few months later. Yoel overheard me telling someone that my grandfather, many years ago, had heart attack in the car and died. "His head must have gotten a big booboo going to heaven," Yoel said. Why? "It had to first go through the roof of the car."

unconscious goal here is to get your attention, and given your response, she has succeeded. Consequently, she will whine again the next time she wants your attention. This is not something the child plans or even thinks about. It happens on an unconscious level.

The more appropriate way to respond, according to Adler, is to ignore the behavior, but not the child. This is hard work. It means you have to try not to react emotionally to this bothersome behavior. If you can remain calm in the face of this provocation, you can keep on relating to the child as you did previously, without reacting to the whining. Once the child realizes she has not gotten extra attention by resorting to whining, the behavior will stop.

Our group leader told a story to illustrate this principle. During Shahbat evening meals, her youngest son always sat next to his father, who was wearing a clean white shirt. During the meal. the boy would somehow get his hands on his father's shirt and dirty it. This was generally a very well-behaved child whose father hardly ever got angry at him but this would set the father off. His mother, who had already had some Adler training, knew better than to

"This is between him and his father. I bave no place there." As soon as she managed to distance herself from the behavior, it stopped. Our group leader cited a fascinating study that also served to illustrate the central Adlerian point: in order to understand children's behavior, we need to look at their goals and not at their reasons. The study found that infants of deaf mothers cried just like any other newborn while they were in the hospital. But once they got home, they began to cry without the yells and screams of most newborns, and instead with just tears. (Newborns don't generally cry with tears.) On some level they understood that the noise would not bring their mothers, but the tears would.

The negotiations were revealed for the first time at the Paris Air Show by LAI board chairman Avigdor Ben-Gal.

Last year the Defense Ministry torpedoed Lockheed-Martin's attempts to acquire 40 percent of Israel Military Industries' heavy artillery division, on the grounds of opposition to exposing Israeli technology to foreigners.

As a matter of course, IAI's workers union opposes any moves toward privatization, outlined in an incorporation program prepared by company management.

Katz also told Lockheed-Martinrepresentatives that since Ben-Gal's actions had been taken without consulting the union, Lockheed-Martin could hope to buy not a going concern, but empty factories. Globes

Overmars, Boamorte join Arsenal

LONDON (AP) - Dutch winger Marc Overmars and Portuguese striker Luis Boamorte yesterday became the latest for-eign players to join Arsenal in the English Premier League. Overmars, 24, joined the London club in a £7 million move from Ajax, where he won three Dutch league oiles and the European Cup in five years.

Overmars, who signed a five-year deal with the Gunners, will link up with fellow Dutch star Dennis Bergkamp, Boamorte, 20, came from Sporting Lisbon in a £1.75-million deal. The new transfers bring Arsenal manager Arsene Wenger's summer spending past the £10-million mark following the signing of 26 year-old French defenders Emmanuel Petit and Gilles Grimandi earlier this month.

'NHL has settled on four expansion cities'

TORONTO (AP) - The NHL has chosen Nashville, Atlanta, St. Paul, Minnesota, and Columbus, Ohio, as its next four expansion sites, according to broadcast reports Monday. NHL spokesman Arthur Piocus said the league would have no comment on the reports. The Sports Network and CNN-SI said Nashville will start play in 1998, followed by Atlanta in 1999 and St. Paul and Columbus in 2000.

The league had also been considering bids from Houston and Oklahoma City.

Red Sox slugger out with knee injury

BOSTON (AP) - Boston first baseman Mo Vaughn was scheduled to have knee surgery yesterday and that could deprive the last-place Red Sox of their best hitter for six weeks.

The arthroscopic procedure is intended to repair tom cartilage on the outer side of Vaughn's left knee, which locked up when be slid into home plate Sunday night and remained locked Monday morning, team physician Dr. Arthur Pappas said. Pappas said the 1995 AL MVP will miss between two and six weeks. But he predicted it would be closer to six weeks because Vaughn's left knee is critical to his powerful swing.

Vaughn is fourth in the league with 20 homers and leads Boston with 45 RBIs. His .335 batting average was eighth in the AL and second on the Red Sox to Reggie Jefferson's .342 going into Monday's game.

F1 driver Panis likely out until autumn

MONTREAL (AP) - Formula One driver Olivier Panis will likely be out of action until at least this fall after having surgery on both legs be broke in a crash at the Canadian Grand Prix.

"It will be six to 12 weeks before he is walking again," Dr. Pierre Ranger, the orthopedic surgeon who performed the operations, said Monday.

Ranger was careful not to speculate about how soon the 30-year-old Frenchman would be able to take the wheel for his Prost-Mugen Honda team.

But Ranger did give an idea about how long it takes most people to fully recover.

"I would say it's between two to four months to heal those fractures and get in shape," he said.

On the 52nd lap of Sunday's race, Panis hit the wall coming out of turn four at the Gilles Villeneuve circuit before skidding across the track and plowing into a tire barrier.

Spanish minnows ham up original win bonus

MADRID (Reuter) - Extremadura are offering an original win bonus to the opponents of their rivals at the bottom of the Spanish first divsion - a leg of their home town Almendralejo's famous ham.

The threat of relegation has led club president Pedro Nieto to promise the hams to each of the players of Barcelona and Real Madrid for beating Rayo Vallecano and Celta Vigo respectively. Third-party bonuses are banned in the Spanish game, but few commentators deny that their existence is widespread. "I don't think the (Spanish Football) Federation will fine us for giving a ham ... we can't offer money," said Nieto. To stay in the first division Extremadura need to l

Lions beat Emerging Springboks 51-22

WELLINGTON, South Africa (Reuter) - Tim Stimpson's haul of 26 points and a har-trick of tries from Nick Beal helped the British Lions to a comfortable 51-22 win over the Emerging Springboks in their final match before Saturday's first test. Full-back Stimpson, batting to dislodge Neil Jenkins from the Test starting line-up, gave the selectors something to think about with a try and nine successful kicks out of 11 attempts at goal.

Beal's tries all came in the secondhalf after the Lions had led by just a point at the interval, ensuring the touring team will go into the Cape Town Test with a record of seven wins from eight matches. They had raced into a 13-0 lead after just 11 minutes but were pegged back by the aspiring Springboks who scored two tries through flanker Warren Brosnihan and replacement back Marius Goosen.

The first of winger Beal's three tries came within three minutes of the restart and set the tone for a dominant Lions display in the second period. Their slick passing put Beal in for a further two tries while Stimpson and fly-half Mike Catt both profited from quickly-taken tap penalties close to the home side's line to score simple tries. The Emerging Springboks - seven of whom toured Britain with the South Africa A side at the end of 1996 - were limited to one further try after the interval through Paul Treu.

Absorption center squatters continue protest

The Jewish Agency yesterday hired a security firm to prevent confrontations between new immigrants living in the Mevasseret Zion absorption center and homeless squatters who broke into the center over the weekend and took over several unoccupied apartments. On Monday night, a recent immigrant from the US attacked one of the squatters, whom he caught trying to steal a fuse from his fuse box, with a baseball bat. The alleged thief was hospitalized.

Mediation attempts continued yesterday, while squatters declared they would forcefully resist attempts to remove them. They have threatened to blow up cooking gas canisters in the apartments they have taken over. Itim

Ben-Ari withdraws appeal against his remand

By RAINE MARCUS and ftim

Penina Daburin, the lawyer for Zvi Ben-Ari (previously known as Gregory Lerner), yesterday withdrew his appeal to the Supreme Court against the extension of his remand.

Ben-Ari is suspected of committing an $85 million bank fraud, the murder of a banker in Russia, and of bribing bank managers and civil servants.

The withdrawal followed comments by Justice Eliyahu Mazza, who indicated there is no basis for his contention that be was discriminated against because the others involved in the case were freed on bail.

Mazza noted that treating defendants differeotly is commoo practice. He said that the leader of a group of criminals is often the only one arrested, especially if he pulled the others after him, or if he was the one who actually committed the crime and the others only assisted him.

Meanwhile, Industry and Trade Minister Natan Sharansky, head of Yisrael Ba'aliya, will be summoned by police this week to give evidence regarding donations he allegedly received from Ben-Ari. Sharansky is expected to be the second politician to give evidence; Labor MK Nissim Zvilli aiready has given cvidence.

Police sources emphasized that ministers and politicians will at this stage be called only to give evidence, and will not be questioned under caution as suspects.

The politicians, they said, will be summoned in an effort to shed light on Ben-Ari's alleged illegal activities.

Attorney-General Elyakim Robinstein met with National Investigations Chief Sando Mazor yesterday to determine procedures, since the summoning of political figures, even if they are not suspects, is a sensitive issue.

Immigrants protest Meretz propaganda

Election propaganda by Meretz activists at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem has roused the anger of Amit, the students' immigrant party, and others. The flyer shows a caricature resembling Avigdor Lieberman, director-general of the Prime Minister's Office, recalling in very poor Hebrew the days in which the Likud-affiliated party headed the students' union. The character says: "Then we sorted everybody ont. Leftists, look war against racism just a slogan when it comes to Jews who immigrat-ed from the CIS?" Amit asked in a counter flyer. The party said it is insulting to laugh at immigrants for the way they speak Hebrew.
